Marco Piva presented at Marmomac 2019 a garden devastated by a storm, a space shaken by its tranquility and transformed, shaping the material that had originated from the same nature.

The lightness of the wind contrasted with the weight of the marble, changing the surrounding space. The earth joined the sky, the floor with the ceiling. The slabs on the floor were marked by flashes of light, which ran along the path accompanying the sinuous shapes.

Marble, a pure and natural material, was transformed into the air, into the wind, and the tornado became less dangerous, but fascinating, elegant and dancing in space.
